Description
When a file should be copied to a subdirectory of Configuration/*/, e.g. for a subcontext, the scp operation fails.
The (misleading) error message is scp: /var/www/.../Configuration/Production/Subcontext/: Is a directory – the real cause is that the directory does not exist and thus scp would rather copy the file to the folder path, which is pointless as the path points to a directory.
Solution would be to execute a mkdir -p ...$configurationPath before copying the file.

[BUGFIX] Copying config fails for subdirectories

When a file should be copied to a subdirectory of ``Configuration/*``, e.g. for a subcontext, the scp operation fails.

The (misleading) error message is "scp: /var/www/.../Configuration/Production/Subcontext/: Is a directory" – the real cause is that the directory does not exist and thus scp would rather copy the file to the folder path, which is pointless as the path points to a directory (as the path ends in a slash).

Solution is to execute a ``mkdir -p ...$configurationPath`` before copying the file.
