Description
Fluid offers experimental TableListViewHelper. For simple use in backend modules it works fine except that the pagination moves user from selected backend module to List module. I think pagination should work "inside" current module without redirecting to List.

[TASK] Remove hardcoded module name in AbstractDatabaseRecordList

TYPO3 Fluid offers view helper TableListViewHelper to generate records list in backend modules. When pagination is rendered for this list all links (previous, next etc.) redirect to List module but they should point to current backend module. Reason of this behaviour is hardcoded module name in listURL() function.

This patch replaces hardcoded module name with the M parameter from GET array. Extbase modules require also controller and action name in url's so all GET params are merged with this defined in listURL() function. We are using all GET params because module might require more than controller and action name for other elements than records list.

[BUGFIX] Remove GET parameters from URLs in List module

DatabaseRecordList (List module) generates returnUrl for localization links. These must not contain the 'justLocalized' parameter, as this would cause redirects to edit form over and over again.

This fix removes the inclusion of all the GET parameters - introduced with #55314 - again. Only the module parameter is used from GET/POST. Additional API enables extbase plugins to add necessary parameters.

The TableListViewHelper does not need any more parameters besides the module name and hence still works after this patch.

In `/typo3/sysext/recordlist/Classes/RecordList/AbstractDatabaseRecordList.php` we have function `listURL()` and there is hardcoded module name/id:

return BackendUtility::getModuleUrl('web_list', $urlParameters);

This module ID should be dynamic and points to current active module or configurable.

Extbase modules also require action and controller and this values should be also included in `$urlParameters`
