Description

When a schema is fetched from the server the json is stored in the ResourceCache. Currently there's no check whatsoever if the return value is valid json yes or no.

As in some cases it happens the server returns HTML (for example if the session is expired) the ResourceCache stores invalid values, which are stored in the browser and can not easily be cleared by the user.

[BUGFIX] ResourceCache stores invalid schema data

When a session is expired the ajax calls for fetching the json schema data from the server return html. This is now saved in the ResourceCache basically disabling the user to work with Neos in his current browser till the session storage is cleared.

This change makes sure that the html is not stored, and the promise for fetching the schema is failed.

[BUGFIX] Json parse regression in ResourceCache

Change I8364fe8d86f2c9ec82e764829f2db0c3c2a41c20 introduced a regression. Because now the dataType is configured to be json $.ajax will also return a json value. This caused a serie of errors where Neos tries to parse objects to objects using JSON.parse().
