Description

The Step Installer sometimes want to present some "flash messages" which are passed over from one controller to the next through the session. Currently these messages are displayed over Step installer box.

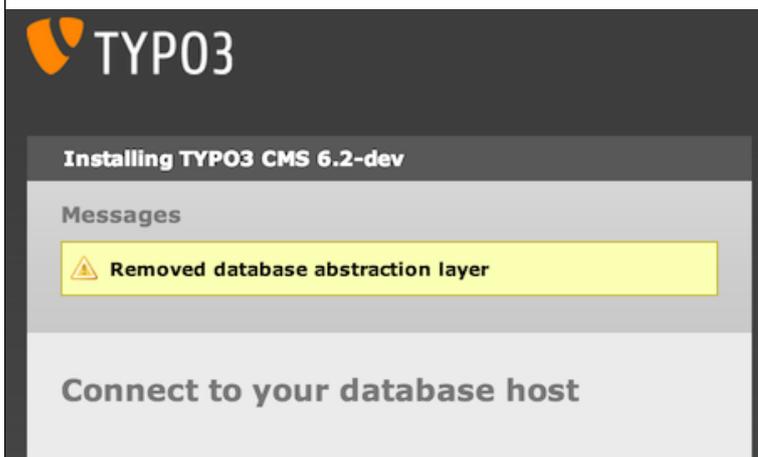

And this looks ugly:

This looks especially ugly in the first step of the Step Installer if the install tool tries to create the directory structure and fails on every single directory due to permission problems.

This is just a tiny adaptation to make it "less ugly", could be turned over again later on if we find an even better solution.

My pragmatic suggestion for now looks like this:

I am not a fan of the integrated FlashMessages - might be added into the container above the content. But please do not add an extra container "Messages"

Well, you mean keeping them above even the title of the page? Have you had 3 or 4 (or even 20) of these flash messages over the content box? Try fixing permissions in "Step 1" if your root directory is not writeable by the server. Outside the box the Flash messages are totally unstyled. As if someone forgot to do something here. Looks ugly! :)
