Output of bundle exec rake routes:

issue GET          /issues/:id(..format)          {:controller=>"issues", :act ion=>"show"}
  PUT            /issues/:id(..format)          {:controller=>"issues", :act ion=>"update"}

So no clue, why this is happening.

One thing that I've already tried is to replace the http://URLs in `/var/gerrit/review/hooks/patchset-created.d/update-forge-issue.php` with `https` (resp. port 443 for the `fsockopen` call).

We probably need this as we're now redirecting `http` calls to `https` on forge.

That's right. Had to do the same to fix some RSS feeds which are displayed on `typo3.org`.

For some reason Gerrit at least can mark a ticket as "resolved" somehow, it seems. Maybe that helps to debug things? Example where gerrit automatically set it as resolved and gave a note in what changeset this was applied: <https://forge.typo3.org/issues/60401>

#7 - 2014-07-23 12:33 - Peter Niederlag

Resolved is handled by a different mechanism ;)

- `gerrit/hook/patchset-created` |-- triggers --> update forge ticket to add pointer to gerrit review
- forge repositories are synched (tags/branches)
 - lines with `Resolves|Fixes: #XXXX` shows up in `refs/heads/*` will close corresponding ticket

Steffen did some investigations and we rolled out `t3-gerrit 0.4.8` which should hopefully solve this matter (using `tls://` and port 443 for connection from gerrit hook to forge) seems to be working again: <https://forge.typo3.org/issues/60436> :)

Please report here if you still spot it failing somewhere.

I can confirm it seems to work. Pushing a changeset here <http://forge.typo3.org/issues/60327> worked fine as well.
