[!!!][FEATURE] FormEngine element level refactoring

The patch introduces a new API on FormEngine element level that substitutes the old "wizards" / renderWizard() API with a more powerful system.

Single wizards are now split into one of three categories:

- An informational wizard
- A control button / icon
- A true wizard with additional functionality

Method renderWizards() is still called in elements for compatibility reasons if people added own scrip/popup/userFunc wizards, but all core wizards are migrated.

The patch significantly cleans the HTML of single elements, especially HTML stuff that was added by the SingleFieldContainer is now put down to single elements, while main HTML wraps formerly done by renderWizards() is fetched "up" to single elements. This gives single elements full control about the main HTML it is producing, which is a must have preparation in order to further advance in this area and to switch single elements to fluid rendering in one of the next steps.

The patch brings a pretty huge list of TCA changes and simplifications, all TCA changes are supported by TCA migration, so existing extensions should benefit out of the box and just get deprecations logged.

Moving this issue from 'bug' to 'task' and to a different parent:

The pending patch was abandoned since it is a rather ugly hack. The real solution needs a refactoring of container / element structure. This will not go into 7.6 but into master. I talked with Frank about this area and maybe he comes up with a couple of patches to resolve this.

Thus, imho, while this issue is a visible drawback, it is not a blocker in 7.6 and we could live with it for now and strive for a good solution in master.
