Description

The database table `sys_lockedrecords` should only be cleared via the BackendUtility when a Backend user is logging off. Currently, this is also called for Frontend Users, which actually removes everything from the currently logged-in backend users with the same uid.

As this is very bad code design on many levels (lockRecords for unlocking, no context for the authentication user object etc), this should be encapsulated within the BackendUser object directly anyway.

For further abstractions, this could also be a hook or something else, to be even cleaner.

[BUGFIX] Only unlock records in BE user log off functionality
