Description

Back in 2009, JavaScript code was introduced that mimics PHP's rawurlencode() and str_replace(). The only difference between rawurlencode() and encodeURIComponent() is that the latter doesn't mask asterisk characters, which isn't required anyway.

str_replace() was never necessary in first place since JavaScript supports string replace out of the box.

[TASK] Deprecate `top.rawurlencode` and `top.str_replace`

The global JavaScript functions `top.rawurlencode()` and `top.str_replace()` were introduced in 2009 and have been marked as deprecated now. The code is not required and some special handling used in these functions may get achieved with native JavaScript functions.
