If a container instance is provided for a unit test via GeneralUtility::setContainer(), it needs to set to null again, in order to not affect other unit tests.

[TASK] Do not set GeneralUtility::$container in unit tests

The GeneralUtility $container instance should only be set/used in functional tests as we a) can not reset the instance (which means other unit tests are affected) and b) should mock/inject dependencies in unit tests.

TreeDataProviderFactoryTest is therefore changed to use GeneralUtility::addInstance() (which is intended for unit tests) instead of GeneralUtility::setContainer().
