Description
Refactored session handling introduced a new property, which is initialized when method "start" is called.
Since "start" is overridden in CliBackendUserAuthentication, the property is never initialized, but accessed, once a log entry is written calling the "writeLog" method, leading to a fatal error.

[BUGFIX] Do not try to access user session on CLI

Since CommandLineUserAuthentication does not initialize the session property (because session handling is not needed on cli), a fatal error occurs, when calling the `writeLog` because a potentially simulated user is checked by accessing the session within this method.

Therefore this check is now overridden as well in CommandLineUserAuthentication to always assume the original (cli) user for logging.
