Description
Both, After and After Throwing advice, should be triggered after returning from a method or on an exception thrown by a method respectively. However, they must not intercept neither the return value nor the thrown exception. The latter is the case though. So, currently, if one does not rethrow the exception in one's advice, the exception is swallowed by the advice. That's problematic when using AfterThrowing for logging an exception (e.g. AccessDeniedException) and forgetting about throwing the exception afterwards.

[+BUGFIX] FLOW3 (AOP): After and AfterThrowing advice make sure that original exception gets through

Currently both advice types intercept exceptions thrown in the advised method and delegate the responsibility of rethrowing it to the advice implementation. This patch fixes this behavior and makes sure that the original exception comes through, no matter what.
